

Emil Sauer, at His First Recital, Delights Mendelssohn Hall Audience

BY SYLVESTER RAWLING.

EMIL SAUER, the German pianist, has a long head and a face that is lined beyond his years. His nose is straight, his eyes are deep-set. It is said, he was taken often for Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the premier. But when he smiles the ruggedness of his countenance disappears. His eyes take on a roguish twinkle. His gravity vanishes. He becomes as appreciative of adulation as any ordinary mortal.

Mendelssohn Hall was crowded on Saturday afternoon at Sauer's first recital. He was cordially greeted, applauded generously and forced, from time to time, to give extra numbers. At the end there was a scene that is familiar. The concertgoers who flock to an entertainment by any star performer have a special liking for a pianist, so they crowd around him, stare and demand more. It was there that Sauer disclosed the lighter side of himself. He smiled, bowed, waved his handkerchief, shook his fingers playfully at persons here and there and, protesting he'd never consent, continued to play again and again.

Sauer's playing is chiefly remarkable for its brilliancy. Whether he chooses to pound, as he seems to think sometimes necessary, or to let his fingers wander over the keys with the lightness of a zephyr, his touch always is crisp. There is no slurring. He reaches the effects he desires unerringly. He appeals to the head rather than to the heart. One could wish for a little more warmth and a little more sentiment in his rendering of Schubert's Impromptu No. 3, the Scherzo from Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Night's Dream" and the Chopin numbers, but in his own sonata No. 1 in D major, in Brahms' Fourth Concerto in D minor, transcribed by August Strindberg, and in Liszt's "Venezia e Napoli" he was altogether admirable.

FIRST PEOPLE'S SYMPHONY CONCERT NEXT FRIDAY.

One of the most important factors in the development of musical knowledge and taste in New York is the People's Symphony Society, whose concerts are directed by Franz N. Arent. These concerts are intended primarily for the education of students and workers, and the prices are popular, but they are of such quality as to interest all lovers of music. The ninth season opens at Carnegie Hall next Friday night, when MacDowell's symphonic poem "Easter" after Keats will be played. It was not produced during the composer's lifetime, as he waited for an opportunity to revise it, and the manuscript has only recently been published. The young violinist Kozlovsky will be heard in Saint-Saens' concerto in D minor, and the programme will end with Tchaikovsky's great fifth symphony.

In conjunction with the society is the People's Symphony Auxiliary Club, which gives six chamber concerts a season at Cooper Union Hall. The first of this year is announced for a week from Friday, with the famous Kreisler Quartet as the performers. The programme will consist of Haydn's quartet in D flat

SHOOTING ON LONG ISLAND.

All trains from New York arriving yesterday at Eastport, L. I., brought scores of hunters to the hunting resorts on Long Island, today being the opening of the quail, partridge and rabbit shooting season. Quail are reported scarcer than in former years, but rabbits are in abundance.
